Unemployment Rate

Resilient with Growth Opportunities

The Los Angeles North industrial market demonstrated resilience in 2024 despite absorption challenges. Year-to-date net absorption totaled -1.8 million square feet (SF), but steady demand in key submarkets like Van Nuys and Woodland Hills kept the region dynamic. Asking rents averaged $1.53 per SF on a triple-net basis, reflecting overall market stability.

The market's overall vacancy rate of 4.2% remains healthy, with standout performances in Van Nuys and Woodland Hills, which reported exceptionally low vacancy rates of 1.9% and 0.8%, respectively. In contrast, higher vacancy rates in Chatsworth and Santa Clarita Valley present opportunities for tenants in an otherwise tight market.

Construction activity is robust, with 1.5 million SF underway, led by Antelope Valley with over 1 million SF and Santa Clarita Valley contributing 251,310 SF. Year-to-date, 587,753 SF of new industrial space was delivered, including key projects in Santa Clarita Valley and NoHo/Universal City, which aim to alleviate demand pressures.

Despite negative absorption, the Los Angeles North industrial market is poised for growth. Strong construction pipelines, competitive rents, and strategic leasing activity reinforce its position as a critical industrial hub in Southern California.
